In the city of Montgomery in Alabama (USA), on 1 December 1955, Rosa Parks, a 42-year-old black woman, was going back home by bus after her working day.

There was a racial segregation system on the city public transport. Buses were organised in three sections. The ten front seats were reserved only for white people. The ten back seats were reserved for black people and in the middle section white people had the priority: if there was a white passenger without a seat, black passengers had to stand and empty a row of seats.

That day, Rosa Parks was sitting in the middle section. She refused to stand and give her seat to a white passenger. The bus driver stopped the bus and called the police. Rosa Parks was arrested for disobedience. The incident caused the Montgomery Bus Boycott, a non-violence protest campaign with a leader called Martin Luther King. 90% of the black community of Montgomery stopped using the city buses.

On the 13 November 1956, the United States Supreme Court sentenced that segregation on public buses and transport was illegal. The boycott ended on 20 December, 381 days after Rosa Park's resistance, when the city of Montgomery authorised black bus passengers to sit anywhere.

Rosa Parks is considered one of the symbols of the American Civil Rights Movement. She died on 24 October 2005 at the age of 92.
